-One of the physicians of Wellington in the extremest of the cold weather found in one of his professional calls a home and family more destitute of the ordinary comforts of life than any of our people would like to believe. It is apparent that one, and perhaps the chief reason that a once comfortable family has come to such bitter want is the fact that a portion of the scanty earnings of the husband and father is paid for liquor, when every penny expended at the saloon is so much bread and fuel and covering taken from his suffering wife and needy children, as surely as if they had been directly robbed. Whoever enriches himself by the price of a single drink from this man should be conronted with the shivering misery and umb want of his household. Four little children and the mother of a babe no older than the New Year, are not fit subjects to battle with hourly necessities alone. They need all one laborer has to divide. The Townsends.

This Company comes to our town with the best of references. The Toledo papers, where it performed during the holidays, speak in the highest terms of this troupe. The Townsends will appear here on Friday and Saturday evenngs of this week in the great sensational drama "Nick of the Woods." From among the scores of press notices we have seen of this talented company. we select the following:

THE TOWNSENDS.—A large house greeted this excellent company of artists last night. The tragedy of Othello was presented. In the character of the Moor, Harry Townsend has gained eminent distinction at the leading theatres in England and America. Miss Contract Townsend is a barrylar of the contract of t has gained eminent distinction at the leading theatres in England and America. Miss Constance Townsend is a charming actress and sustained the character of Desdemona with marked ability. Mr. Burnett Townsend as Iago is unapproachable. In his hands the character has a fine portrayal. The costumes worn by this company are as fine as any we have ever seen in Toledo.—(Toledo Bee, Dec. 27, 1878.

"Nick of the Woods," as played by the Townsends last night, resembles, in many respects the performance of the celebrated Buffalo Bill Combination, but is, in our opinion, by far the most exciting piece of the two Nick of the Woods is fall of interest, and keeps the audience up to the highest pitch of excitement from beginning to end. The company has evidently made a specialty of this piece, and it was the most successful performance it has given here.—Rochester, N. Y. Democrat.

The Townsends performed the great sensational drama of 'Nick of the Woods' to a crowded and delighted audience last night showing clearly that it matters not what piece they undertake, whether it is tragedy, comedy, farce or sensational, they are masters of their profession.—Toronto Globe.

Those who were present and are fond of seeing painted to the life the excitements and dangers incident to ploneer-border life must have been highly gratified last night. In "Nick of the Woods" the Townsends gave a very graphic delineation of the hardships and barbarities our early pioneers had to battle with in the western wilds. The piece is founded upon history and of the sensational achool we know of no better.—Oswego Palladium.

The Wellington Dairymen's

It seems to me that the results of our convention were almost fruiltess if not disastrous. What did we do? Simply passed a few resolutions. Like Mark Twain commencing with the New Year to keep a diary, it all went smoothly for a while and then it began to lag, and when spring came with its usual spring fever, it was omitted entirely. It is not necessary to make the application to ourselves as we already experience the results. If we stop here we shall have given away our rights not only as dairymen but shall have stamped upon us the incompetency to do our own business, and to follow dairying under these circumstances will be to impoverish us as a community or drive us from the business that is the best adapted to our soil and climate. Dairymen, shall we stand this? Shall we allow a combination to rule the price of our own products, and say 6½ cents is enough for cheese when the market was auxious, or would bear 7, simply that they may curich themselves upon other communities by using ours as a keynote to establish the price? We owe it to ourselves and to our fellow dairymen in other localities to do our duty, assert our manhood and prevent the ruin of one of the greatest industries of our country. This nixed price for manifacturing and selling does all this. Stop this, make un honest article of cheese, and when it is ready for market, take it and sell it to whom you please, and then we will soon find out whether the country demands grind-stones or a palatable article. Yet broach the subject of a change of quality or price and they will tell you that to stop skimming will ruin us and to reduce the price of manufacturing will ruin them. Now we are ready to accept the depression in price of all kinds of produce, but we are not willing when the market being so glutted by a first class article of produce that it was not wanted at a living price? There has been It seems to me that the results of our con a time and within the past year too, when thousands of pounds of our cheese was not wanted at anything over the cost of manu-facturing and selling. Especially was this the case where a few freight bills, several commissions and other incidental expenses were charged in.

Every dairyman must certainly have his eyes open by this time and fairly understand the situation, and now shall we stand by and the situation, and now shall we stand by and see the results of our hard labor and the cream of a business best adapted to us pass into the hands and to satisfy the greed of a few, who, it would seem, delight in impoverishing us that we may be the more completely subjected to them.

I say appoint another meeting and keep them up till we shall have accomplished our aim. Who seconds the motion?

ED. ENTERPRISE —We attended the dairymen's Convention held at Weilington, not as a dairyman or a factoryman, or as a cheesemaker, but as a great lover of good cheese, and we expected to hear the pros and cons of factory made cheese fully discussed. But we were sadly disappointed and had we been a dairyman we should have considered the meeting almost a fallure. The skimming process was moderately discussed and generally disapproved of.

But with us the great question is and it is a question that is important to the maker as well as the consumer: "Can as good cheese be made from milk put into a can and hauled churning and swashing over a rough road from one to six miles, as can be made from milk manufactured into cheese by the 'usual dairymen's process?" The time has been when Western Reserve cheese stood No. 1, in the markets of the world. This was before the factory system was introduced. Now under the factory system the quality and good character of Western Reserve cheese is lost, but we hope not past redemption. We don't believe the factory men are in fault or that the moderate skimming process is the whole cause of the loss in quality. We think it unjust in the dairymen to ask the factorymen to make a first quality of cheese from milk that has been churning in the cans for two hours before receiving it. They make a fair article but we don't believe they can make as good an article as can be made by the dairymen in the usual way.

There has been much said first and last, of the injustice practiced by the manufacturers towards the dairymen. Of this we have nothing to say. But we were somewhat amused a day or two previous to the meeting when we said to a dairyman whom we chanced to meet: "You will come to the convention on the seventh, will you not?" No, it's of no use. The factorymen will have it all their own way. They have got the twist on us and we can't get sway anyhow you can fix it, and we may as well give it up first as last." If this is correct we would advise the dairymen to behave them selves discree the mode of manufacture which secured to them their high character as cheese-makers and opened to them the markets of the world, surely the interests of the dairymen and manufacturers are blended as the brother said. We have bought our cheese of our grocery-man the past year for our family use and have paid from ten to twelve cents per pound for it and were glad to get it at that. But it was dairy-made cheese from the dairy of B. Herrick, good every pound of it, and several times when our grocer was cut of dairymade cheese we have taken a bit of
